Hosta, "Popo"

A beautiful blue green miniature Hosta that has leaves with a strongly upward cupping habit. It forms a very tidy and attractive compact mound of foliage. This Hosta will work equally well in a formal setting or in a casual garden.

This Hosta grows to 8 inches high and forms a mound that is 10 inches in diameter. The leaves are 3.5 inches long by 2.5 inches wide. The oval leaves are shiny and somewhat wavy.

This perennial has lavender flowers. The tubular flowers bloom in late June and are held on 10 inch tall bloom stalks.

Hosta Popo is a beautiful shade plant that can fit into the smallest of gardens. The light blue/green leaves would make a great contrast plants with brighter colored foliage.

Goldenrods, are strong-stemmed plants, often growing to 6 feet tall, with either smooth or lightly toothed alternate leaves arising from a root crown or rhizome. They bloom in late summer or fall with sprays of small, usually golden-yellow flowers. Goldenrods are happy in full sun or partial shade with good, well-drained garden soil. They will also do well in moist conditions. Great for the wild garden, stream side, or naturalized in meadow gardens, goldenrods are striking in the open bed or border. They are excellent for cutting.

Scientific name of goldenrod: Solidago hybrids
